Hurricane Matthew Recovery Efforts, United States East Coast

Emergency Management Assistance Compact (EMAC)

- Cal OES staff continue to monitor resource requests and situational awareness being submitted under the Emergency Management Assistance Compact (EMAC) process from the states of Florida, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Virginia in support of Hurricane Matthew. Resources to support states affected by Hurricane Matthew came from as far away as California and Washington.
- California deployed a 2-person EMAC A-Team (also known as an EMAC “Advance” Team), for a two week deployment to support Florida’s State Emergency Operations Center. Cal OES Mission Tasking Number 2016-SOC-27164. The team was instrumental in coordinating response resources from other states and assisting Florida in other areas as needed. Florida has now transitioned from response to the recovery. Accordingly, the team will return to California today.
- Other EMAC member states are also monitoring and responding to requests from the affected states.
- Additional information on the EMAC process can be found here: <http://www.emacweb.org/>

FEMA US&R

- The Urban Search and Rescue (US&R) Blue Incident Support Team (IST) has been activated in support of Hurricane Matthew.
- 19 California Task Force (TF) members were deployed: (1) TF 1; (1) TF 2; (3) TF3; (5) TF5; (1) TF 6; (2) TF7; and (6) TF8. Cal OES Mission Tasking Number 2016-FIRE-27170.

WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- A prolonged period of very wet and windy weather is forthcoming this week for much of Northern and parts of Central California.
- There will be a series of weather systems rotating through the region that will bring heavy rain (storm totals as much as 5-10" in some locales), gusty winds in excess of 50 mph (possible downed trees and power lines), and snow accumulation in the higher terrain (possibly impacting travel through higher mountain passes).

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Some cloudiness will be spreading into the region today ahead of a significant weather system offshore that will be moving inland Thursday with substantial precipitation amounts and some strong southerly winds. Rainfall along the coast is expected to start after midnight and will spread east and south during the day and overnight. Areas near and east of the Sierra crest and the southern Sacramento Valley probably won't see much in the way of precipitation until Thursday night. The precipitation will become more showery Friday with a few (very wet) thunderstorms possible. Another windy system will arrive Saturday with even more precipitation for all areas through Sunday. There will be a short break in between systems Monday with some lingering showers before the last in the series of weather systems shows up Tuesday with more, but lighter, precipitation. Conditions appear likely to be dry and warmer the latter half of next week in the wake of the incoming wet systems. Snow levels will be lowering overall during the evolution of these weather systems over the weekend. Ultimately they will be near 5500 feet at times in the northwest areas and dropping to around 6000 feet later in the weekend around Tahoe. The strongest speeds in the windiest areas will reach the likes of 20-30 mph sustained with gusts of 40-65 mph, locally stronger. The strongest winds are most likely in the higher elevations and in the southern Shasta Valley (greater Weed area). Temperatures will continue the cooling trend today and Thursday with afternoon highs in the warmest areas in the upper 70s. Friday through Sunday those same areas will be in the unseasonably cool lower and mid 60s before some warming returns early next week.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A very weak trough moving ashore will bring a deep marine layer, cool temperatures and breezy conditions to the area today. The marine layer is significantly deeper this morning and stratus will linger in the valleys and lower coastal slopes through the mid morning hours. Temperatures will be a few degrees below normal today with highs in the 60s along the coast and in the mountains to the 70s in the valleys. Southwest winds of 10-20 mph with gusts to 30 mph will be possible in and near the Antelope Valley, Banning Pass and the Cleveland National Forest this afternoon. These winds will die out overnight and no winds are expected Thursday as a very minor ridge builds over Southern California. Temperatures may climb a couple degrees Thursday over today's highs across the inland areas. Friday into the weekend, a trio of storms will impact the Pacific Northwest and the northern half of the state. These storms will arrive about every 36 hours with the main bands of rain occurring Friday, Saturday night and Monday. The first of the storms appears to be the strongest with the last two being significantly weaker. Most of the precipitation will remain north of the area, but a half inch of precipitation may occur in Monterey County and in the Sierras north of Fresno County. Snow levels look to remain above 7,000 feet. It will be very windy in the Sierras, western Owens Valley and Inyo National Forest during the passage of each of these storms with wind gusts over 50 mph possible. Southern California will not be directly impacted by these storms and temperatures will remain quite similar through the period with mostly sunny skies continuing during the afternoon and evening hours. The storms will be out of the area by next Tuesday. All long range models point toward a much hotter and drier pattern developing for the second half of next week. Some offshore flow may develop next Wednesday, but at this time, pressure gradients and resultant winds do not appear that strong. Expect highs well into the 90s with min RH in the single digits and teens over Southern California during the second half of next week.
